FIXING THE UX OF THE COVIVILISATION

10 SYSTEM UPGRADES FOR HUMANITY

Unify humanity — everyone on the same page.

Resolve conspiracy theories — starting with:
“Is climate change a hoax?”

Build a full-cost economy — impact, co-benefits, externalities, and long-term consequences included.

End all wars — including the war on drugs.

Repurpose military technology — from destruction to planetary regeneration.

Turn AI disruption into climate adaptation work — new jobs restoring homes, cities, land, water, and resilience.

Build a global energy grid — with a worldwide
CO₂ emissions trading system.

Connect everyone — global internet, satellite access, and on-device AI for all.

Make media inform, not inflame — truth over outrage, clarity over polarisation.

10

End bank secrecy, offshore hiding, and tax havens — with a simple worldwide tax framework.

'Is climate change a hoax?'

Why not add 'is the Earth flat'?

Because there's less evidence for a round planet than there is for climate change, caused by humans.

If the Church still had big power, as much as the fossil fuel industry, and still as much commitment to a flat earth as in its prime, I am sure as many people would be pummelling the flat earth platform and denying all the science, too.

Moral of the story:-

You can't fix the system as it is or bit by bit. The problems are too embedded. It needs to crash and burn for something truly different to arise.

Why not add 'is the Earth flat'?

It is added by default.

Note the wording:

- ★ conspiracy theories (plural)
- ★ starting with...

Snippet from my Future Vision XPRIZE teaser:¹

Starting with Flat Earth might be practical... What other theories to resolve and unify humanity: JFK, aliens, 9/11 (building seven), Charlie Kirk, Epstein, HAARP, COVID?

(asked AI and it suggested to start with MK ULTRA to set a baseline)

I've been debating various climate change deniers → learning about human psychology.

Leaning into the pessimism, I ran the prompt below and got the resulting session saved as a Doc. It would be great if minds changed on mass scales, but maybe they won't. Maybe the human species will effectively fork, instead.

Prompt: "Assuming 99% of humans believe climate change is a hoax, suggest an effective human species survival strategy for the other 1%."

Assuming 99% of humans believe climate change is a hoax

I find the premise of the question strange.

This comes to mind:¹

"Assuming ..."

Assuming that I'm glitch in the matrix whose stated purpose is to realign versions of reality, I suggest the following:

- ★ to have the ultimate debate on ALL conspiracy theories...
- ★ ...starting from Flat Earth and Climate Change
- ★ all experts
- ★ all regular people
- ★ all AI models
- ★ all arguments and counter-arguments

Some people will choose to believe whatever they choose to believe, no matter the facts.

Nº11

Justin

2026-07-01

The summarised recommendations run parallel to another, more realistic, prompt: 'assume no meaningful change in the present trajectory, including embedded consolidation of wealth and power by those who benefit from, and rely on, continued extraction and use of fossil fuels'. Because that is the trajectory humanity has been on for decades, and no amount of gathered urgent warnings from the scientific community - now gone beyond desperation to exhaustion - has changed the trajectory by one iota. The world remains fully hooked on fossil fuels. But even if it wasn't, it still has the predicament of somehow dealing with all the greenhouse gases that have been pumped into the atmosphere to date, which are enough to push things over the edge within a few decades (if not starting to already). And I'm not even touching on subjects like circulation of pervasive pollutants (for example, microplastics can now be found in the high arctic and deep ocean floor), the dire state of the oceans, and a biosphere collapsing as a result of species extinction, rampant deforestation, critically declining soil health, and so on.

Anyone really familiar with the science knows this is not pessimism but realism.

The world remains fully hooked on fossil fuels.

That's about the sum of it. I doubt persuasive arguments will matter all that much. Physical signals will force change in the end. Whether you want to accept my 1% number or pick a different one, the early adopters of less energy-intensive lifestyles are what Toynbee called a "creative minority". Conveniently, creative minorities are also known for launching new civilizations, so there's that. But even if the entire world gladly gave lip service to climate change risk, the mechanical details of shifting food, clothing, transport, housing, etc. away from carbon consumption suggest climate change will need to be reckoned with, more than prevented.

I was also thinking about cultural changemakers, a bunch of dudes with massive audience:

There is an entirely serious point in the post for that quote that the entirely serious thread participants here may wish to consider. It's essentially the same point Nassim Taleb makes about bestselling books living in "Extremestan". Namely, sales per book are not even remotely distributed per book author, and the actual distribution is nothing at all like the famous bell curve. Rather, some huge proportion of total book sales fall to a very small proportion of star authors at the top of the charts.

Taleb just notes this phenomenon, but given that we're working on cultural change models here, I got to thinking, is there some cognitive or cultural mechanism that tilts book sales distribution in such a skewed manner? My best shot is it may well involve each of us having rather limited cognitive bandwidth. There are only so many star authors (or star anything) most of us wish to attend to at a given time. It stands to reason, then, that market forces will tend to cluster extremely around some small constellation of names that are likely to drive sales. The audience, in effect, can only tolerate so much on the menu. So it's a winner-take-most sort of set-up.

Because I am ultra-pragmatic, my first impulse is simply to take note that is how the world seems to work, then to think about ways to leverage that understanding. At the risk of driving outrage (then again, in a discussion forum, outrage is not entirely bad!), I've suggested to Rufus that 2R ought to cultivate a stable of "star" presenters. My spit in the wind estimate is more than 1 or 2, but less than 10 or 20. Why a single digit "star presenter" stable? Because that's pretty much what cognitive bandwidth will allow. Attention just focuses that way. It's like a force of nature. We can fight it. Or we can use it!

Kind of.

Close enough.

Big picture adds up.

- ★ Unifying narrative
- ★ Reverse engineering from the future
- ★ Backcasting
- ★ Hyperstition
- ★ Planting myths, seeding stories
- ★ Future Vision XPRIZE

The solution to metacrisis starts with:

*" "problem well defined is problem half solved"
"we can solve any problem, we cannot solve all the problems all at once" "*

That's why the key angle of attack: UNIFIED VERSION OF REALITY, this is the problem I would solve first.

One that is affecting everyone: CLIMATE CHANGE. I'm in the camp of threat multiplier, tipping points, feedback loops, obsolete climate models, MBBF (multibread basket failure) and deep adaptation. I take climate change very seriously and I'm watching how American military is bombing oil depots in Iran, that surely cannot be good for the climate.

Attaching full quote.

"vibe adds up" is the description of the genre.

Here is how I know the vibe adds up:

- ★ IN PERSON: microexpressions, people dancing to my music, people laughing to my memes
- ★ ONLINE: people asking questions, diving deeper, reacting with emojis, retweeting

► QUOTING DVDJSPH

You said you're in the feedback loop camp

The phrase "feedback loops" is deeply embedded in the context of climate change.

I believe in feedback loops.

Rainforest is rainforest because the moisture is recycled many times. Convert rainforest to beef production: not rainforest anymore.

Forest fires cause residue to land in Arctic that affects the albedo effect. That's definitely not cool.

► QUOTING DVDJSPH

so do your memes become more effective based on the measured impact?

No.

They do become more effective: yes.

But not based on the impact, not based on measured impact.

They become more effective through experience + vibes + inspiration + remixing + timing + pure chance. My AI tooling is not sophisticated enough to know upfront, often it is trial and error, game of numbers, persistence.

All advanced civilisations we know existed in the holocene. This is a period of relative climate stability that allowed for agriculture; it was due to last until the next ice age, but now it is prematurely coming to an end and the gradual cooling that Earth would have experienced is instead flipped into an unprecedented heating. What this will look like long term we can't be sure, but even the mildest of 'hot house Earth' scenarios takes us out of the holocene stability.

If it's not possible to do agriculture, how can there be advanced civilisation? Nomadic tribes is another story.

Maybe you could argue some technologies enable civilisation in hostile environments. The thing with that is, if even 'just' 70% of humanity are in survival mode, how long will the stable places that implement such technologies last for?

Moreover, human technology will always degrade with time, and have limitations. If it's human tech versus the unbridled powers of wider nature, I know which side comes out the victor, given a passage of time.

► QUOTING JUSTIN

Maybe you could argue some technologies enable civilisation in hostile environments.

Maybe I could! Better thinkers than I have grappled with these questions quite a bit, but I do have a bit of flair for curating high quality opinion. Nate Hagens lately has been musing on a variety of scenarios (bad, worser, worstest, best of a bad lot), and I've been musing on his musings. Where maybe my thinking might add a bit of value comes from my deep historical reading across many civilizations. I have pretty detailed notions of civilizational spawn and collapse (again, very much informed by all the most capable scholars and thought leaders). So where are we now with respect to that?

The basic Toynbee formula for civilizational spawn is "challenge-response". I'd put most of your post above into the "challenge" category. Is humanity capable of sufficient response? Given the full span of what we're adapted to so far (the great bulk of it very non-Holocene), I like the prospects. The core challenge, as you rightly point out, is living within our planetary means. Like many others before me - Malthus, Erlich, Turchin - I see population as a key driver. It's hard for me to visualize successful human adaptation to this planet at a scale of 8 billion humans or more. Take those numbers down by an order of magnitude or two and it all becomes more plausible. Current demographic collapse across most of the developed world suggests on an unconscious level, great masses of people are sharing that intuition. (This is worth a look:¹

A lot of what is likely to happen under current GPD-maximizing stay-the-course scenarios is very Malthusian. That will not be fun to live through. Of course, Malthus's predictions of impending population limits turned out quite wrong. So did Ehrlich's. Are Hagens and other current climate catastrophists missing the predictive mark in similar ways? I don't think so. Turchin seems pretty darn accurate to me and paints a clear picture of what politics looks like when populations outrun their resources. It looks quite a bit like what we have now. Likewise, Peter Pogany's predictions of global chaos due to entropic limits seems both prescient and strongly grounded in sheer empiricism. The Fat Tony in me says endless GDP growth is for "suckers" and the most intelligent bets are against it.

So I think Hagen's "Great Simplification" is on the doorstep. Managing through the chaos between here and there is not for the faint of heart! But, for example, if you look at my "doomer" AI session above, of course we can adapt. That is, some Noah somewhere will likely have an ark. The question for most of us is - do we just build a personal bunker? Or can we do something at larger scale to ease the massive transitions we all must endure?

I was active on Twitter, replying with my memes to popular accounts on trending topics.

Unfortunately, my account got suspended too, right now I'm shopping around for a lawyer that would take my case on "no win no fee" or "pro bono" basis. Twitter is formiddable opponnent, Elon Musk is skilled in lawfare, it's an interesting endeavour.

It appears that some human is in the loop "post restored by staff" but only partially.

Everything can be seen as spam.

Everything can be seen as sharing ideas.

Everything can be seen as discussion / conversation / culture.

Everything can be seen as art.

In my email to forum@lifeitself.org I've highlighted a nuance:

I wouldn't use the word 'criticize', what I'm trying to offer is feedback so you can improve your idea. Vibes are good, but not sufficient - number games have to have measurable impact as well in order to guard against self-deception.

Cards on the table, I've been getting pulled in the direction of being some sort of media producer for a long time. (Which is borderline ridiculous, because I was feeling those vibes back in my high school educator days). But now - maybe - sort of that! I do rather openly imagine "Second Renaissance" as a major lifestyle brand for the cultural creatives hard at work forging the foundations of the coming post-collapse civilizational revival. So work with me here Does the cultural-creative movement of our times need "brands" and "brand campaigns"?

For me, hard "yes!" on those questions! As you would no-doubt point out, such branding without substance is just more slop on top of the slop we already have. Got it. On the other hand, I do deeply believe the esoteric must now rise from the depths and become exoteric. To me, that is where @Mars lives. @Mars will NOT be running the accounting department in my fantasy media conglomerate! But there is lots of room in the art department for his very special skill set. The thing about media is - no art, no cash flow (or eyeballs or engagement or personal transformations or whatever the metric is). So if I had to choose between firing the art department or firing the accounting department, that's an easy call. I can run numbers on Excel. I can't pull media properties out of my butt that way. So artists are very, very important in my personal scheme of things.

For throughput and flow and linear diagram purposes, inspiration begets art, art begets media, media begets engagement, engagement attracts people in their masses to whatever we are doing. Presumably, what we are doing is the NEXT BIG THING. But NEXT BIG THING is a nerdy R&D discussion. You know - like all our DMs, for example. But NEXT BIG THING is one thing. Selling it takes way more than just having it. For me @Mars plays nicely in that "selling it" domain.

“ Given the full span of what we're adapted to so far (the great bulk of it very non-Holocene), I like the prospects. ”

What examples of advanced civilisation do you have of adapting outside the Holocene? I'm not aware of any. The Holocene began roughly 11,000 years ago.

“ Like many others before me - Malthus, Erlich, Turchin - I see population as a key driver. ”

Generally overpopulation is a major driver but it comes with nuances. How people live is very important: an entire village in Africa generally has a lower ecological footprint than the average family in US.

A growing population could also expand to other planets but we lack the technology or reach to make that feasible.

“ It's hard for me to visualize successful human adaptation to this planet at a scale of 8 billion humans or more. Take those numbers down by an order of magnitude or two and it all becomes more plausible. ”

The dynamics may well be easier, but it still doesn't change the core climatic and biosphere stats.

Turchin seems pretty darn accurate to me and paints a clear picture of what politics looks like when populations outrun their resources. It looks quite a bit like what we have now. Likewise, Peter Pogany's predictions of global chaos due to entropic limits seems both prescient and strongly grounded in sheer empiricism. The Fat Tony in me says endless GDP growth is for "suckers" and the most intelligent bets are against it.

Yes, well summarised.

*“ The question for most of us is - do we just build a personal bunker?
Of can we do something at larger scale to ease the massive transitions we all must endure? ”*

This is indeed the question to grapple with. I believe that actually the only way is to aim for a larger transition. Barring extreme wealth, there is not even a practical way for an individual to survive to any level of basic comfort by themselves or within a small group. You need a diverse, reasonably large, community - and it's not just about survival, but creating a seed for renewal. Humans can also play a part in safeguarding life, which is something we (or at least those cognisant of environmental decline) often forget.

What examples of advanced civilisation do you have of adapting outside the Holocene? I'm not aware of any. The Holocene began roughly 11,000 years ago.

In my answer to the core metaphysical question of "why are we even here", part of it runs like this:

The Holocene enabled the advent of civilization, which is something the universe wanted. Now that civilization was spawned, it now must adapt to different circumstances. Presumably, the universe wants that to happen also. "Advanced" civilization does not require the mass populations and mass resource consumption of what we have now. It took all that biological pressure to crowd people together to get us to evolve complex cognitive and cultural structures. We did that, but now we have it and can repurpose it. But the steel cannot stay forever in the molten forge. It needs to come out of the fire and go through other steps to gain its edge. I imagine civilization will need that tempering as well. (Easy for me to say - I'll be in the next world sending spirit messages to whoever remains here to do the actual work!)

The dynamics may well be easier, but it still doesn't change the core climatic and biosphere stats.

All resource requirements per capita get easier with a smaller denominator. There are parts of the world that can run on geothermal, for example. It's just that not all humans can move to those parts. I imagine more selective land and water use by smaller populations will be generally more adaptable. Instead of Gross Domestic Product maybe we can track Subtle Domestic Product and push growth into new dimensions.

Barring extreme wealth, there is not even a practical way for an individual to survive to any level of basic comfort by themselves or within a small group. You need a diverse, reasonably large, community - and it's not just about survival, but creating a seed for renewal.

Practically speaking, this makes sense. The billionaire fantasy of bunkers in New Zealand or orbiting luxury space platforms is pretty much that - fantasy. More likely, we all rise or fall more or less together.

The long history of collapse (there have been many) suggests impacts will be most acute on local and regional scales, however. For example, yesterday I saw news reports of 41+ degrees in Europe (melting German tram tracks) and hotter still on the US East Coast. Where I am, it was 18 degrees, cloudy and moist. My whole bioregion is a sort of insulation bubble against the very worst. So if we get another Eocene Thermal Maximum or something like that, there will be locations at some altitude or another that will remain relatively favorable for grains or potatoes or something we can eat. Assuming of course "we" fits whatever that favorable acreage turns out to be.

Looking at it from a purely personal dimension, if anarchic collapse happens very quickly, I will just die, because I am not well armed, my house is not defensible against determined looters, and my food supply depends on global supply chains and digital assets. Of course, even if the next couple decades are pure Golden Age, I've already exceeded my actuarially expected life span and in effect, am playing in extra time already. So any palace I build for myself alone can only be a tomb. Not especially interesting. A better project seems like spending whatever life and assets I have left doing what you suggest above - seeding the future.

If our sense of "self" becomes very extended - to the point where humans on the far side of the world also count as "me" - then it seems like the non-sucker, Taleb-endorsable approach would be to spread the good ideas all over the place, start ecovillages (or something like that) in every conceivable geography, and then hope that at least some of them make it through the great collapse of the Holocene imperial era. Black Swans are not exactly Black Swans just now, because its hard not to seem them coming. But hedging bets in lots of different ways is very anti-fragile, and although each and every one of us personally is entirely fragile in the end, the meantime we can work towards species-level and eco-level anti-fragility on a global basis.

Far be it from me to devalue art.

If someone shows their interior-oriented plan to solve the meta crisis, I ask to see how it stays in touch with the exterior, measurable side. If someone shows a techno-optimistic, exterior-biased plan, I'll ask about the interior. Generally, we could all benefit from outside perspectives that help put us in touch with the view from the other side.

As Bruce Lee would say, fight a boxer, box a fighter. (Though there's nothing combative in my replies whatsoever! Personally I'm fully on board the Peace Train!)

If someone shows their interior-oriented plan to solve the meta crisis, I ask to see how it stays in touch with the exterior, measurable side.

On the level of personal action, that sort of pure balance makes total sense. At collective levels, however, specialists often prove quite valuable for the good of the order.

Playing Mad Scientist for a moment, let's say we are engineering a Carroll Quigley-esque "instrument of expansion" for the coming civilization that will follow the generalized collapse of the current one. (Or maybe prevent the collapse of the current one, if we are really, really lucky!) Will that instrument of expansion involve perfect artistic-accountancy balance amongst the entire population? Or is it more likely that some artists will mostly art, and some accountants will mostly account? To me, the later seems more likely. In Wilberian terms, must All Quadrants, All Levels extend to All People, All the Time? (AQALAPAT). To me, that sort of perfection is absolutely the enemy of the good. Humans with rougher edges strike me as generally more interesting.

I very much like the well-rounded Bildung approach for primary and early secondary education. I also like interdisciplinary project-centric approaches for all ages. But yes, specialists matter also. All of England at the moment thanks God above that Harry Kane is a pure goal scorer! I have no idea if he cleans up around the house, or says pleasant things to people in the street, or is of any use in an auto shop. Does anyone really care about any of that? Kane has one job to do, and to the great joy of all England fans, he really, really did it! We all likewise can Harry Kane against our own particular goal mouths.

To me, the civilization of the future will still have its specialists, because that is kind the definition of what a civilization is. The question at issue is not so much, will we have specialists? It's more like, will there be any connective tissue that allows the different specialists to be collaborative and communicative with one another? All my Mad Scientist work is currently bent towards those collaboration and communication issues, not so much into verifying that every scout in the troop earns every single merit badge.

I certainly wasn't arguing against specialization. If you ask Harry Kane how his team scores goals, he can give you a pretty straightforward answer, even though it's not his specialty. It's about teamwork, and being aware of where one's gifts complement/are complemented by those of others.

It all starts from the belief that change is possible.

► QUOTING MARS

I'm unsure where my plan fits into that picture? How would you describe my approach of changing the consciousness of the planet through art and imagination?

I like a lot of what I see, though I haven't seen much. What I think you should sharpen, though, is your answer to the question: how does this help solve the metacrisis?

A good way to do this would be to ask an LLM how your plan might be more aligned with Marshall Poe's Pull Theory of media adoption. To me, your plan focuses almost entirely on push rather than pull, meaning it relies on the attractiveness/strength of the the meaning you want to push, not on helping others accomplish what they already want to do better/speaking to needs they already recognize themselves as having.

For example, if someone is a flat-earther, do you think seeing that image you posted is going to convince them they're wrong? Or is it mean to preach to the choir?

A different topic for a different discussion, but there are other ways of convincing people that they're wrong that don't revolve around clever/artistic ways of saying "you're wrong".

Here's GPT 5.5 explaining what I mean regarding pull theory:

pull theory says media doesn't spread just because you push content into the world.

It spreads when people or institutions already feel a need that existing tools don't solve - and your work becomes the thing they reach for.

So the question is not only:

“ How do I make better memes? ”

It is:

“ "Who urgently needs this, what problem are they trying to solve, and how does my art become useful to them?" ”

Your work has strong push energy: memes, myth, spectacle, hope, hyperstition.

To become pull-powered, it needs a clear adopter.

In one line:

Push is broadcasting the signal. Pull is becoming the missing tool people were already looking for.

Marshall Poe's pull theory says new media do not spread just because someone invents or produces them. They spread when organized interests experience a real insufficiency in existing tools and therefore "pull" a new medium into use. Poe's formula is: new economic conditions → technical insufficiency → increased demand from organized interests → new media technology.

The pull-theory reading is this: Mars is responding to a real unmet demand. The metacrisis has created obvious "technical insufficiencies" in our current media/governance stack: shared reality is breaking, institutions cannot coordinate planetary-scale risks, climate communication is failing, and people are starved for credible hope. His website projects - Planetary Council, Network State Genesis, BaseX, Money from the Future, Future Vision XPRIZE, Marsita the Ultra - are all attempts to give aesthetic and narrative form to that demand. The strongest pull is not "people need more memes." It is: people and institutions need new coordination myths, new legitimacy rituals, and new interfaces for collective decision-making.

But the current execution is still mostly push. The images are high-intensity cyber-spiritual propaganda: glowing hearts, doves, rabbits, world peace, "system change," "seven days of pause," "global strike," "consensus ladder," "metapossibility," "memetic virus," "hybrid warfare," "Ministry of Memes and Better Propaganda." They are designed to arrest attention before they clarify an institutional pathway. That is not necessarily bad - art often comes before organization - but by Poe's standard, widespread adoption will not happen unless a concrete organized interest says: "Our existing tools are insufficient; we need this."

So I would describe Mars's project as a push campaign searching for a pull constituency.

The forum shows this tension very clearly. Mars says he wants a "UNIFIED VERSION OF REALITY" and suggests resolving conspiracy theories through a kind of ultimate debate involving experts, regular people, AI models, arguments, and counterarguments. That is actually a pull-theory-compatible diagnosis: existing epistemic institutions are failing, so there is demand for a new public truth-and-reconciliation interface. But then the mechanism becomes much vaguer: memes, hyperstition, vibes, artistic ambiguity, "meme realism," and "it is up to the audience to decide if it is for real."

That ambiguity is powerful aesthetically but risky institutionally. In a metacrisis context, where the problem is partly epistemic breakdown, phrases like "memetic virus," "better propaganda," "sneak in radical ideas," and "audience does not know if this dude is for real" can undermine trust.

Where Mars is strongest: mythopoesis, hope, symbolic compression, visual energy, invitation to participate. Robert Bunge's "art department" framing in the thread seems fair. A movement does need myth, aesthetic charge, and emotionally contagious symbols. Mars may be good at generating the "attention and hope layer" that more sober systems thinkers often lack.

Where the project is weakest: adoption pathway, measurement, governance design, and epistemic hygiene.

So the cleanest answer is:

Mars is not yet operating according to pull theory. He is operating according to supply-push memetics, with an intuitive sense that a huge latent pull exists.

To become more pull-theory-aligned, the work would need to answer:

- ★ 1. Who is the organized adopter? A peace NGO, a metacrisis network, an educational platform, a city, a deliberation community, an XPRIZE-style funder, a youth movement?

★ 2. What insufficiency are they experiencing? Lack of shared reality? Lack of hopeful climate communication? Lack of consensus process? Lack of compelling civic ritual? Lack of recruitment media?

★ 3. What repeatable tool does Mars provide? A meme pack? A global pause campaign kit? A consensus-ladder facilitation protocol? A visual curriculum? A deliberation event format? A mythic brand system for Second Renaissance?

★ 4. What measurable change counts as adoption? More people attending? More groups using the protocol? More donations? More local chapters? Better belief calibration? Reduced polarization? Concrete peace/climate commitments?

My bottom-line read: Mars is trying to create civilizational demand through aesthetic overproduction. That is a legitimate artistic strategy, and sometimes culture does work that way. But Poe's pull theory would predict that the project only becomes historically consequential when some organized group under pressure finds in it not just inspiration, but a usable solution to a practical coordination problem. Right now, it is a dazzling mythology engine. It is not yet an adoption engine.

While acknowledging the realities of bestsellers, I'm skeptical around the actual value of the idea of star presenters. My approach to the problem of cognitive overload is to better coordinate finding the write readers for the materials, and the right materials for the readers. I explored this a bit here:¹ Star presenters is simply too hierarchical, in a space that does not fit hierarchy well. Hierarchy - or at least the respect for expertise - works best in established fields where there is a general consensus about what are better or worse examples; who has more or less expertise, etc. Sure, you may narrow the idea of 2R so that you get down to clear value criteria, but is this really that kind of field, at this stage of development? I'd like to see anyone trying to argue the case.

And I think I'm largely in line with the above comments of @dvdjsph - which make good sense to me.

Star presenters is simply too hierarchical, in a space that does not fit hierarchy well. Hierarchy - or at least the respect for expertise - works best in established fields where there is a general consensus about what are better or worse examples;

I decided to explore these questions through a knowledge management thought experiment. (See below). My thought experiment is indeed based on an established field. (English literature). Or is it that established? Would a large number of literature instructors agree on the proper 100 vital authors for this curriculum? That would be an entertaining discussion! In any case, if it's difficult to wrap minds around essential readings just in the field of English literature, what are the cognitive demands of gearing up for a global Second Renaissance? One would imagine rather more!

Prompt: "Given an English literature curriculum in which students must deeply grasp the works of 100 authors for a comprehensive exam at the end of the curriculum what is the best way to organize the introductory course?"

This morning I was still snoozing in bed, listening to a podcast:¹

The snippet at 3m44s appeared very related to the this topic:

There was a point in time during Iran situation when Trump was posting tweets / truth social / videos on the official profile that were beyond unhinged.

So unhinged I made an offline copy and then re-uploaded to Telegram:

As an artist / art commentator I use events around me as a source of inspiration.

The more unhinged reality, the more unhinged art becomes.

Reality is participatory.

It all starts from the belief. Art has ability to pass through the filters. And that's what I've been doing for the past 2 years, all day, every day, couple thousands hours for sure. Results? I'm happy, stacking little successess here or there, still working towards a major breakthrough. I admit I was too much into creation (infinite game), too little into distribution (a competetive game). I'm evolving, improving, always growing, always learning.

Chancellor on brink of second bailout for banks

Billions may be needed as lending squeeze tightens

Francis Elliott Deputy Political Editor
Gary Duncan Economics Editor

Alistair Darling has been forced to consider a second bailout for banks as the lending drought worsens.

The Chancellor will decide within weeks whether to pump billions more into the economy as evidence mounts that the £200bn part-nationalisation last year has failed to keep credit flowing. Options include cash injections, offering banks cheaper state guarantees to raise money privately or buying up "toxic assets". The Times has learnt.

The Bank of England revealed yesterday that, despite intense pressure, the banks curbed lending in the final quarter of last year and plan even tighter restrictions in the coming months. Its findings will alarm the Treasury.

The Bank is expected to take yet more aggressive action this week by cutting the base rate from its current level of 2 per cent. Doing so would reduce the cost of borrowing but have little effect on the availability of loans.

Whitehall sources said that ministers planned to "keep the banks on the brink" but accepted that they need more help to restore lending levels. Formerly, the Treasury plans to focus on state-backed guarantees to encourage private finance, but a number of interventions are on the table, including further injections of taxpayers' cash. Under one option, a "bad bank" would be created to dispose of bad debts. The Treasury would take bad loans off the hands of troubled banks, perhaps swapping them for government bonds. The toxic assets, blamed for poisoning the financial system, would be parked in a state vehicle or "bad bank" that would manage them and attempt to dispose of them while "detoxifying" the mainstream banking system.

The idea would mirror the initial proposal by Henry Paulson, the US Treasury Secretary, to underpin the American banking system by buying

Summary

The Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and Israel examines violations and crimes against and affecting Palestinian children, including serious physical and psychological harm by the Israeli security forces since 7 October 2023 resulting in the death of at least 20,179 and injury of 44,143 children.

The paper describes the deliberate targeting and killing of Palestinian children, including post-ceasefire since the October 2025 Gaza peace plan. The Commission also examines a sharp increase in violence perpetrated by members of Israeli settlers against Palestinian children in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.

 1. Unify humanity - everyone on the same page.
 2. Resolve conspiracy theories - starting with: "Is climate change a hoax?"
 3. Build a full-cost economy - impact, co-benefits, externalities, and long-term consequences included.
 4. End all wars - including the war on drugs.
 5. Repurpose military technology - from destruction to planetary regeneration.
 6. Turn AI disruption into climate adaptation work - new jobs restoring homes, cities, land, water, and resilience.
 7. Build a global energy grid - with a worldwide CO2 emissions trading system.
 8. Connect everyone - global internet, satellite access, and on-device AI for all.
 9. Make media inform, not inflame - truth over outrage, clarity over polarisation.
 10. End bank secrecy, offshore hiding, and tax havens - with a simple worldwide tax framework.

I recently had this funny thought:

Can we create a social media meme:

Simple referendum: YES / NO / suggestions, improvements, ideas

QUESTION	YES	NO	Suggestions / Improvements / Ideas
1. Voting system — Should the UK replace First Past the Post with a proportional voting system for general elections?	☐	☐
2. Public ownership of critical infrastructure — Should railways, energy and water be brought into public ownership?	☐	☐
3. Rail automation — As rail automation increases, should train drivers become train managers?	☐	☐
4. 5G and broadband — Should full-fibre broadband and 5G be treated as essential public infrastructure, with universal coverage guaranteed?	☐	☐
5. Climate resilience — Should the UK make major investment in flood defences, home insulation and climate-adapted farming?	☐	☐
6. Military spending — Should the UK reduce its spending on arms production?	☐	☐
7. Arms production — Should foreign-owned arms manufacturers be allowed to operate in the UK?	☐	☐

I cannot in good conscience support the ongoing war in Iran. Iran posed no imminent threat to our nation, and it is clear that we started this war due to pressure from Israel and its powerful American lobby.

I support the values and the foreign policies that you campaigned on in 2016, 2020, 2024, which you enacted in your first term. Until June of 2025, you understood that the wars in the Middle East were a trap that robbed America of the precious lives of our patriots and depleted the wealth and prosperity of our nation.

In your first administration, you understood better than any modern President how to decisively apply military power without getting us drawn into never-ending wars. You demonstrated this by killing Qasam Solamani and by defeating ISIS.

Early in this administration, high-ranking Israeli officials and influential members of the American media deployed a misinformation campaign that wholly undermined your America First platform and sowed pro-war sentiments to encourage a war with Iran. This echo chamber was used to deceive you into believing that Iran posed an imminent threat to the United States, and that should you strike now, there was a clear path to a swift victory. This was a lie and is the same tactic the Israelis used to draw us into the disastrous Iraq war that cost our nation the lives of thousands of our best men and women. We cannot make this mistake again.

As a veteran who deployed to combat 11 times and as a Gold Star husband who lost my beloved wife Shannon in a war manufactured by Israel, I cannot support sending the next generation off to fight and die in a war that serves no benefit to the American people nor justifies the cost of American lives.

I pray that you will reflect upon what we are doing in Iran, and who we are doing it for. The time for bold action is now. You can reverse course and chart a new path for our nation, or you can allow us to slip further toward decline and chaos. You hold the cards.

It was an honor to serve in your administration and to serve our great nation.

Dear Mars. How are you actually experiencing this AI generated image? Psychologically or Biologically? Or both? Personally, I am experiencing the reality of this 2-demensional image on the flat surface of my computer monitor, with the receptive nature of the biological reality of my eyes.

And only when I try to interpret what my eyes are receiving a surface-level awareness of, do I slip subconsciously into infusing the reified-reality nature of descriptive words, into an experience I learned to reify with the word; consciousness.

While my conscious realization of the self-deception inherent in reified-reality nature of language, seems to upgrade my whole-body nervous operating system. Through a mindful balance of my biologically receptive & psychologically projective experience of consciousness.

Hi @Mars there may be space for a lot of things to be said on the topic of AI. For now I want to call a kind of maternal wisdom into this space. If you are in the UK you probably know Phoebe Tickell? Nº65

The general Discourse philosophy is new users have a low trust level. So I'm guessing things like external links, images, lots of posts in a short time frame might trigger some anti-spam bot in the platform. Trickle in vanilla text posts for awhile tends to elevate trust levels. Meanwhile, admins can clean up flags manually, but that assumes admins with personal bandwidth to do that sort of thing, which may not be the case.

The Interspecies Council

The aim of the Interspecies Council is to bring the voice of nature and non-human beings into organisational decision-making, governance mechanisms and policy ... Read more

AI Overview

An Interspecies Council is an innovative governance and democratic exercise where humans act as voice representatives for non-human entities—such as flora, fauna, and local ecosystems. Originating from environmental activism, it aims to de-center human priorities, deepen ecological empathy, and integrate the needs of nature into policy and decision-making. The Guardian +2

The methodology was developed by Phoebe Tickell and Joanna Macy (adapted from the "Council of All Beings" grief practice) through their organisation, Moral Imaginations. These councils are increasingly being tested across the UK and internationally: Moral Imaginations +2

Thanks for sharing the video. I've posted an AI summary below for those who may wish to respond to particular points.

The video features a talk by Mars Robertson at unDavos 2024 titled "Peaceful Revolution unDavos 2024 Ignite Talks", outlining a roadmap for a global, non-violent systemic transformation.

Key Themes & Ideas

- ★ The Need for Radical Change: Robertson emphasizes that the current global system is self-terminating, leading toward extinction due to systemic issues like the climate emergency, global interconnected risks, and societal polarization. He rejects the traditional, forceful definition of a "revolution," arguing instead for a peaceful, groundbreaking paradigm shift.
- ★ Flaws in Global Institutions: The presentation highlights that legacy post-WWII institutions, such as the United Nations Security Council, are no longer fit for purpose. Additionally, older climate agreements like the Kyoto Protocol are outdated and fail to address current realities.
- ★ Proposed Roadmap to a New System:
- ★ Unified Narrative & Basic Needs: Human civilization has the capacity to achieve global prosperity, including abundant access to food, water, energy, healthcare, education, and housing.
- ★ Global Mobilization: Leveraging international moments - such as Earth Day, the opening of the Olympics, or International Peace Day - to unite humanity and resolve ongoing geopolitical conflicts.
- ★ Engaging Big Tech & Reforming Finance: Urging big tech companies to pivot away from toxic, profit-driven advertising toward positive consciousness programming. He also underscores the non-negotiable need to overhaul debt-based economic systems and equalize international environmental laws.

★ The Planetary Council: The talk concludes with a call to action to build a new system that supersedes the United Nations, encouraging viewers to engage with a "Planetary Council" initiative. Robertson asserts that massive, "10x" radical change is entirely possible under a new paradigm.

Unified Narrative

The question of unified narrative gets at a major point of contention that has been explored in many other forum threads. The postmodern era famously rejected all prior metanarratives. (Lyotard, most prominently). Many here want to craft a new metanarrative and unify culture around that. Is it even possible? Why would any such attempt not succumb to all the same critiques the postmodern thinkers aimed at previous metanarratives? What do others think?

The postmodern era famously rejected all prior metanarratives.

Just to clarify, I talk about "unifying narrative", not meta narrative.

Something that could become an unifying narrative:

- ★ radical change is possible
- ★ it all starts from the belief
- ★ climate change is happening?
- ★ we need to establish unified version of reality

► QUOTING MARS

“ Deny, Attack, Reverse Victim and Offender ”

The "waging war" wording in relation to the court is ULTRA

Netanyahu has big chances of becoming unifying narrative object.

► QUOTING ROBERTBUNGE

Why would any such attempt not succumb to all the same critiques the postmodern thinkers aimed at previous metanarratives?

What were the critiques previously?

I enjoy areas of beyond meta, meta-meta, arch meta, unifying theories etc... I'm almost certain that if there is a situation:

- ★ Group A: there is meta-narrative
- ★ Group B: there is no meta-narrative

And then a new meta-meta-narrative emerges unifying Group A and Group B.

Why not simply read AI summary of the movie instead of going to the cinema?

One reason to post summaries is to motivate interest in the video content itself. We all get bombarded with more video links than we have hours in a day! Your video thankfully is pretty short and not demanding too much time to just view the original (which I do recommend). But for most video links that show up, one has to wonder - is this one worth the time? AI summaries are one way to establish what that time will spent on.
